Radical Sustainability and Regenerative Activism

A SOCIAL PERMACULTURE course:

Learn how to build community resilience!

In this remarkable course with a special focus on “social permaculture”, participants will learn ways to collaborate and build just and enduring alliances across social divides, as well as skills to build personal, interpersonal and community resilience to sustain ourselves through hard times.

Permaculture planning and development have always had positive impacts on ecosystem health - but hey, now we’re talking about integrating it with community resilience! This ground-breaking two-week residential intensive is also a Permaculture Design Certificate (PDC) course with plenty of hands-on opportunities. From inoculating mushrooms and digging swales to building with natural materials and sheet mulching the land, many hands on projects allow students to put permaculture principles into practice.

This Earth Activist Training course will provide examples of policies and projects that communities can adopt to protect their biodiversity and natural resources as well as shape better community management tools to build resiliency and hope in an age of consequences.

Come to this focused intensive course to learn tools and skills for communities to work together across the gaps that often divide us in order to sustain ourselves through hard times. Learn not only good options to make a difference, but ways to catch this wave of support. But register now! The deadline for accepting registration, work trade applications, and scholarship applications is just around the corner. Reserve your space now.
